UTILITIES

Internet Service Providers

There are three categories of internet service providers (ISPs): modem dial-up, Digital Subscriber Line (DSL), and broadband. DSL and broadband internet also allows for wireless internet access.

- ◆ While dial-up internet access uses phone lines and is slower than DSL or broadband, it is typically much less expensive (and sometimes, free). Some dial-up ISPs servicing Oakland County are: America Online (AOL), EarthLink, NetZero, and PeoplePC, among others.
- ◆ DSL access is more expensive and much faster than dial-up, though slower and typically less expensive than broadband. Carried through the same cable as your phone line (although, unlike dial-up, you can use your phone and be online at the same time), DSL is provided by your phone company and often offered as a bundle with your phone service.
- ◆ Broadband internet is typically offered through cable TV providers and offers the fastest internet access, usually at the highest price. Broadband access is almost always available as a bundle, with optional packages including VOIP and digital cable TV.
- ◆ Over 73% of people in Michigan live in households with internet access. Michigan ranks thirtieth in the nation for household internet usage, and lies just above the national average.
